SENATOR BROMM: Okay. But that's not going to involve the county?

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: No, that's our aid, that's a special provision amendment. It's supplemental to their aid formula, and it works.

SENATOR BROMM: We can do that at the state level.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: That's correct.

SENATOR BROMM: Okay.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Yeah, all that happens is that their budget, their tax asking on their budget is reduced, so I guess you might say there's some county involvement in that they will certify a lower levy than they would have, if we hadn't...

SENATOR BROMM: Okay. And this may...I may run out of time, and I may have to go into this more later. But year two in...well, year two,...

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Um-hum.

SENATOR BROMM: ...which is each of these three years, I understand. I'm trying to understand, and they're each different. But year two, when that relief is computed by the local county, do we have...is there going to be any substantial or additional cost, or do the county...do the counties and their computers have all the capabilities to implement that year two without additional cost?

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: There will be some cost at the county level, that will vary among the counties. There are 70 counties that are serviced by a computer program that's maintained by NACO. NACO actually prints the tax notices for, I think, 52 of them; the other 18 print their own tax notices, but they are all serviced by the same computer program. I think that three of the large counties are also on the same program, if I remember correctly. Lancaster, Douglas, and Sarpy County, I believe, are on one program. So when they change, all of that is done. The other 20 counties have a miscellaneous processes, and there will
